CUBANS EMBARK ON HOMEWARD JOURNEY.

Great Body of Teachers, Who Have Been Studying at Harvard, Have Left Cambridge—To Visit in New York, Washington and Elsewhere.

Good luck and a happy country to the Cubans, was the sentiment felt by everybody as this week the teachers from the Pearl of the Antilles packed up their effects and started on their homeward journey.

Wednesday and Thursday were the days given up to getting the Cubans started, and busy ones they were, and full of a peculiar interest. For six weeks the dark-hued seniors and seniors have been at Harvard and up and down the Cambridge streets, learning from books and observation and making many little acquaintances and friendships that have rendered their stay here a pleasant one for themselves and all, in college circles and outside, who in any way have contributed toward the hospitality that has everywhere been shown the visitors. Many sad regrets were felt both by the Cubans and their friends here at the parting, but bright memories will remain of the trip, in so many respects wonderful as to its conception, management and results. All in all, the promoters of the expedition and the Cubans themselves have abundant reason for mutual congratulations as far as they have gone with a cheering prospect of more extended congratulations to be recorded when the visitors have got home and at their school work again, where they may put into effective circulation their newly acquired general ideas and methods of instruction.

Some of the men left Cambridge Wednesday, but the general exodus took place on Thursday in the midst of a heavy rain. But the Cubans' happy remembrances of their weeks of study and recreation at Harvard and their anticipations of further sightseeing in some of the principal American cities, together with a natural pleasure at the thought of an early arrival home, caused them to take the wetting good naturedly. They also were very patient at the somewhat slow and awkward manner in which they were put aboard the transports at the navy yard, and soon were steaming down the harbor away from Boston and Cambridge.

The few days previous to their departure were occupied with duties that seemed more attractive and diversions that seemed more pleasurable as the final hour drew near. Below will be found a summary of the closing days of the Cubans' stay and the particulars of their departure.

Last Saturday, some of the Cuban teachers visited the flower mission at Newton. Flowers were sent to Memorial hall, and were distributed among the teachers Saturday night while at supper. They were highly prized and many of them will be taken home to Cuba.

Sunday was a quiet day among the Cubans, as there were fewer social affairs to engage their attention than on preceding Sundays. Special masses were continued in the morning with vestal vesters in the evening at St. Paul's Catholic church, and some of the teachers also attended services at Brighton seminary.

One Hundred and fifteen of the Cuban teachers enjoyed the hospitality of the J. C. Ayer Co., at Lowell, Monday afternoon, and before leaving that city they had an interesting peep at the manufacture of print cloths at the Hamilton mills, and carpets at the works of the Lowell Manufacturing Co. The party left Boston on a special train at 11:50 a.m., and arrived in Lowell 40 minutes later. From the Merrimack river station they were taken to the Ayer building on Middle street, and when they entered the spacious office they saw numerous placards on which were printed words of welcome and good will. "Viva Cuba Libre" was common, also "Viva los Cubanos." The old office of the company had been transformed into a Cuban-American banquet hall, in which there were three long tables. On all sides were seen the Cuban and American colors, the effect being quite novel and pleasing. This, and the banquet and entertainment provided, showed the good will of the Ayer Co. to their foreign guests; the guests themselves had a neat, spontaneous way of showing their appreciation of American hospitality.

When the orchestra struck up a lively melody of patriotic airs the Cubans caught the significance of "Yankee Doodle" at the start and clapped their hands loudly. There was a chorus of "Vivas," and all the Cubans rose when their own national air was played. The patriotic airs, whether American or Cuban, were always signals of applause from the visitors, while the tuneful, minor-keyed waltzes bearing Spanish names passed unnoticed. After the banquet addresses of welcome and good will were given the visitors through an interpreter, Mr. Mayor Crowley, Supt. of Schools Whitcomb and Manager A. E. Rose, of the Ayer Co. Responses, also through interpreters, were made by Luis Quesada and Valdes Miranda. It was a very well managed trip, for when the special train started for Boston about 6 p.m., every Cuban was on hand.

In Sanders theatre Monday evening a farewell concert was given for the Cuban teachers, under the auspices of the Catholic societies which have given the series of dances in Hemenway gymnasium. The executive committee in charge included: Edmund Reardon, chairman; Joseph O'Gorman, John J. McNamara, Dr. J. M. D. Ford, Moses H. Douglas, Miss Anna Goodrow, Edward N. Manning, James S. Mahoney and Paul E. Fitzpatrick. The concert was given by Misses Anna C. Westervelt and Mary L. Crowley, sopranos; Mrs. Annetta Welsh McMunn and Miss Teresa F. Maginnis, contraltos; Michael F. Dwyer and Daniel J. Murphy, tenors; Dr. L. M. Brine and Frederick L. Benjamin, baritone; James T. Whelan, pianist; Miss Patricia Olden, accompanist.

A band concert in honor of the teachers was given on Cambridge common, Monday evening, by the Cambridge City band, C. N. Phelps, director. The band appeared in new uniforms. A feature of the program was the polka, "Savonar," written by Senora Mathilda Peters, a Cuban teacher, and dedicated to Supt. Frye. The concert attracted several thousand spectators.

Concluding the musical features of the Cubans' stay in Cambridge came the concert given by the teachers themselves in Sanders theatre, Tuesday evening, to which all who contributed to the teachers' fund were invited. The concert consisted largely of selections by a chorus of Cuban women who occupied the platform. Opening remarks were made by Senora Gil, a polka, written by Senora Peters, a Cuban teacher, was given. Among the selections sung by the chorus were "America," "The Star Spangled Banner," with solo by Senora Sanchez; the Cuban national air, and "Fair Harvard." The latter song closed the program. Senora Sanchez also gave "El Libro Santo" and "La Paloma." The most interesting feature of the concert was the presentation of a loving cup to Harvard university as a testimonial of the teachers' gratitude for the opportunities extended to them during the last six weeks. The cup, bought by a subscription of $500, stands nearly two feet high, is tastefully engraved and appropriately inscribed in Spanish. There are three handles, each topped with a flower. On one side engraved on a plate is the inscription: "The teachers of Cuba, Pupils of the summer school." In the center of the shield is: "Testimonial of gratitude to the illustrious University of Harvard and its president, Charles W. Eliot." Underneath are the figures "1900." It bears the Cuban and American flags and the coats-of-arms of the United States, Cuba and Harvard university. The presentation was made by Senora Ruiz Tamayo, of Matanzas, and the gift was received by President Eliot. The remarks were in turn interpreted in English and Spanish.

In a private dining room at the Colonial club, Tuesday afternoon, President and Mrs. Eliot were the hosts at a luncheon given to all of the ladies who have acted as chaperons during the stay of the Cubans. Among those present were Mrs. Theodore Brooks, Miss Alice Longfellow, Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick and Mrs. Inez Wallace. President Eliot addressed the party briefly, expressing his gratitude for their services, and Mrs. Brooks and Mrs. Gulick responded.

Wednesday saw the hurry and excitement of the great party of Cubans preparing to depart. At 8:30 were held the last recitations in English, or what was set down as a recitation, for it developed into simply a last leavetaking between the Cubans and their instructors. Many of the women were in tears over leaving the instructors to whom they had become greatly attached in the six weeks.

St. Paul's church on Holyoke street was packed to the doors Wednesday morning by Cuban teachers in attendance at the solemn high mass celebrated there. The ceremony was of double significance to them, as it was not only a celebration of the feast of the Assumption, a great holy day among Catholics, but it was also in the nature of a great religious service of thanksgiving and farewell. The mass was graced by the presence of Archbishop Williams. He was attended by Father Fidelis, the celebrated Passionist missionary who has been detailed to look after the spiritual wants of the Cubans during their stay, and Rev. Father Powers, of Havana. The mass was celebrated by Very Rev. William Byrne, D. D., vicar general of the archdiocese, assisted by two Cuban priests, Father Mesner, canon of the Cathedral of Havana, deacon, and Father Soler, sub-deacon. Father Ruiz, a professor in the Seminary of Havana, preached a sermon in Spanish, in which he besought the teachers to bear in mind their trip to the United States, and gave them some good spiritual advice.

Wednesday morning a large party of the teachers from the province of Santa Clara paid a visit to Mayor Champlin in his office in the city hall, and gave him a purse of $100, which is to be held in trust and to be presented to two boys in the Cambridge public schools, $50 to a boy and $50 to a girl, who make the best records for scholarship. One of the teachers made a few remarks which were interpreted by another, and Mayor Champlin responded, his remarks being repeated in Spanish.

At 1:30 Wednesday afternoon the men who are to go home on the transport Rawlins left Cambridge on special cars for the Charlestown navy yard.

Beside each woman teacher's plate in Memorial hall on Wednesday evening was placed a small strip of wood from the Washington elm, appropriately labeled and presented by Mr. Charles Mason, the well known Cambridge surveyor, who had been presented with a large branch of the old tree 20 years ago by a city official. It occurred to Mr. Mason that the teachers would appreciate the gift of a bit of the tree they had so much admired on account of its history, and he thoughtfully had the little strips of wood prepared to give the women on the eve of their departure. That they were delighted with the gift does not need to be stated.

All Thursday forenoon the embarkation of Cuban teachers on the transports Sedgwick, Crook and Meade went on, in pouring showers from the navy yard. Such a farewell as this was most discouraging to the Cubans, but they stood the discomfort with patience. The women suffered much damage to their light clothing from the rain. Nearly all of them carried boxes with new hats in them, and these were wet down until they caved in, and their contents were sadly moistened. All the teachers left Harvard Thursday forenoon by special cars and in barges, and were taken to the navy yard before noon. On their arrival there those assigned to go on the Sedgwick and Crook carried women only, went aboard at once, as the transports were hauled in alongside wharf 6. Those for the Crook, men and women, had to wait for transportation, and while they waited the rains descended at frequent intervals in drenching showers. As the men on the transport Rawlins went aboard Wednesday night, they were not wet down, but could observe the crowd on the dock from the decks of their ship in the stream with considerable complacency. The Sedgwick was easily loaded, and was ready to leave at noon. The Crook was the third ship ready, and the Meade was the last. Before reaching Highland light the transports ran in a dense fog which shut in from the eastward about 5 p.m., and extended down over the shoals, and probably proved most vexatious to the navigating officers and the teachers as well. In spite of this uncomfortable send-off, the teachers have had, as a whole, a most fortunate trip. They have not had any rainy weather to speak of during their visit to this country, the summer having been the driest and finest for many seasons.

There has been no serious sickness among the teachers, and not a single death during their stay here. This is a most fortunate record, and quite remarkable when it is remembered that there are 1276 teachers in the excursion, and all were unaccustomed to the climate here. Before leaving Cambridge the teachers did not neglect the demonstrative farewell so natural to them, and before they left they had cheered everybody they could think of who has in any way contributed to their enjoyment during the last six weeks. President Eliot, Mr. Frye, the Holden chapel officials, the instructors and chaperones, and the owners of the houses where the teachers have been entertained, all came in for their share of the enthusiasm, and when this was over the Cubans cheered the buildings as vociferously as did ever a graduating Harvard class. Then the cars started, and the teachers sorrowfully turned their backs on the scenes of their long visit.

The transports were due in New York yesterday, making the outside trip. The program then included the taking of trains at Jersey City immediately and going to Washington direct. In Washington the entire 1276 teachers will put up at hotels. Quarters are all arranged for them. This afternoon the teachers will be received by the president at 3:30, after having visited the capitol in the morning. There will also be a reception to them this afternoon in Glen park.

Sunday morning will be devoted to sightseeing and going to church in Washington, and about noon trains will be taken for Jersey City. Monday the whole party will go up the Hudson to West Point, on specially chartered steamers. Tuesday Columbia university and Central park will be visited, and there probably will be a banquet given in

Was on the Common the other day, saw Sam and John in very earnest conversation. Sam asked John what he thought would be the outcome of that China Closet. John said if that two-faced Eagle got in there first there would be nothing left north of that big wall. Sam wanted to know if they couldn't have a Peek in the China Closet, too. I did not want to hear any more so left and went down to the market and found such a beautiful sight there that I loaded my team up with Tomatoes, Corn, String Beans, Butter Beans, Apples, Pears, in fact, Vegetables and Fruits of all kinds. Coming out I saw a team loaded down with the Choicest of Lambs. I bought the lot and had them brought to honor of the teachers by the New York city government.

That afternoon the transports will be boarded again, and will sail for Philadelphia, where two days of entertainment are promised the teachers, including visits to Girard college, Independence and Carpenter's halls, the mint, Lafayette college and Fairmont park.

On the afternoon of Aug. 23, the transports will sail in company from Philadelphia for Havana.

They will be under orders to enter the harbor of Havana at the same time.

A day will be spent in Havana, and the transports will then leave to distribute the teachers not living in Havana and vicinity to the 13 other ports from which they came when they embarked for the north in June.

EXPEDITION'S GREAT SUCCESS.

Supt. Frye, when he was asked whether the results of the Cuban teachers' expedition had fulfilled his expectations, replied very positively in the affirmative. He said: "Yes, and far exceeds them. You may say they have gone ten times beyond the expectations of President Eliot, Secretary Root and all others connected with the work. It was not expected that wonders would be accomplished in the brief space of six weeks, but the fact remains that the teachers have done a great deal more than we thought it possible for them to do."

Deepest gratitude on the part of the Cuban teachers is shown by the following letter which they gave to the press just prior to leaving:

"The Cuban teachers who have been so kindly invited to visit Boston and its beautiful suburbs feel that they must send, by means of the public press, a tender and affectionate farewell and a brotherly embrace to one and all of the city's inhabitants for the many proofs of appreciation which during their stay they have had the satisfaction of receiving from this noble and learned people."

"We will with this grateful recollection be erased from their memories, and their hearts will always beat with most tender and sincere affection."

"The honorable President Eliot and Mr. Frye may be very well satisfied with their work, for without doubt, the Cuban teachers will reap immeasurable advantage from this important sojourn. The Cuban teachers will do all in their power to demonstrate their appreciation of the interest and favor shown their beloved Cuba."

"The amiable students of the university may be equally assured of the everlasting gratitude of the Cuban teachers for their tactful attention and refined treatment in their mutual intercourse."

"Hurrah for the grand American nation!"

"Viva Cuba Independiente!"

LATEST FROM THE CUBANS.

transports was no fault of theirs; in fact, if the naval men had not taken a hand and helped furnish the departing guests with shelter their condition would have been much worse. From the very first the army quartermaster's department has ignored the yard officials entirely, and while they feel the slight, they are saying nothing officially.

St. Peter's, although defeated, put up the better game, and would have won only for a close decision by the umpire in the ninth inning. In that inning, with score 11 to 10 in favor of St. Peter's, and two out on Hingham's side, the umpire called a man safe at the plate who was clearly tagged out by the catcher, thus allowing Hingham to tie the score. Hingham then scored the winning run. Flavin and Felt did the twirling for St. Peter's and Henry caught. Sheridan and Doyle put up a good game. Today St. Peter's plays in Westwood, and a victory is looked for.
